Really, the program is a good leap in our Arab education systems especially for those who are after outcome-oriented learning as it is based on systematic program starting from (setting criteria and standards, teaching methodologies, integrating 21st century skills, assessment for learning, assessment of learning and authentic assessment) The IAB, briefly, focuses on both hard and soft skills and prepares learners to life and work market.

As a standardized exams and assessment consultant, I do confirm the effectiveness of IAB on developing global and lifelong skills of Arab learners. This approach in teaching prepares learners to real life activities as one of the tools of assessment criteria is project-based that enhances communication, cooperative and social skills.

In the near future, I am sure that there will be full reference framework for teaching staff, IAB specialist subjects and the program will be extended to include K-12.
